

A Sub-tropical Paradise

Cornish gardens certainly live up to the phrase 'flaming June'.

With its mild climate, the county is well known for its sub-tropical plants and this time of year many of the gardens are alive with colour, so what better time to visit?

There are so many gorgeous gardens in Cornwall to choose from, such as the famous Lost Gardens of Heligan, a sub-tropical paradise with year-round interest at Trebah in Mawnan Smith and the 70 acres of gardens, museum and herbal workshop at the Trevarno Estate in Crowntown. Why not visit the beautiful gardens at Grampond's historic Trewithen estate, or Lamorran House Gardens in St Mawes?

Glendurgan Gardens in Falmouth is another sub-tropical haven for plants, which has its own maze and three beautiful valleys leading to the Helford River. Further afield is the unforgettable Tresco Abbey Gardens, one of the highlights of Tresco on the Isles of Scilly, and one of the most talked-about places in the gardening world.

These are just a few of the many beautiful gardens Cornwall is lucky enough to have, so do try and get out and about this month and explore some of them while they are at their finest. ▶

Tresco Abbey sub-tropical Gardens in summer

Trevarno Garden
boathouse

Caerhays Castle and gardens

Lamorran House Garden

Glendurgan Garden

Trebah Garden

The Eden Project

